

To Our Birthmom,

Our names are Nancy and Josh and we have a son, Brandon. We did not realize how hard this letter would be to write to you. So many emotions and thoughts flood our minds of what we would like to tell you about our family. We hope our letter and picture will bring you some peace of mind knowing that your baby will be welcomed and loved in our family.

About our family

We are still on our honeymoon after being married for 11 years. We met 2 years before while attending the same college and we have been together ever since. We have always had a close relationship. Not long after our relationship began, our son, Brandon, was born. Due to Nancy's Congenital Heart Defect, we have decided to take a safer route and start our new journey into adoption. We want very much to be parents again and Brandon can't wait to be a big brother. He is already planning his days with his little sister (or two).

About Nancy

I grew up around a small town. I attended the same school from kindergarten to my senior year. I continued my education and received my 4-year degree in Communications. For the past 8 ½ years, I have been working as the lead Infant Teacher at a daycare. When I am not working, I am involved with different church ministries, bowling, and volleyball. Family time with my life-long friends is very important to me since my immediate family is quite small. I have a very supportive brother, whom is married and has 2 wonderful children. We have always been close and since our parents have passed we depend on each other even more.

About Josh

I grew up with my 2 brothers and 1 sister in a medium size town. I am close to all my siblings and their families. We have 2 nieces and 2 nephews that we love to spoil on my side of the family. I attended a college somewhat close to home and earned my 2-year degree in Automotive Technology. I recently went back to school and I currently work as a certified Massage Therapist. When I am not working, I like to spend time relaxing, watching sports, and working on cars. Nancy and I enjoy vacationing in the Caribbean and going to the Renaissance Festival.

Some thoughts from US

I think we have really opened our hearts to the decisions birthmothers are challenged with. As much as we want to be a mommy and daddy again you are very much apart of this baby's life. We want her to know where she comes from. We would like to meet you and exchange pictures a few time a year, if you wish to.

Each one of us has a special roll in making our family complete. A new baby could only make things that much better and there will always be plenty of hugs to go around. We wish you the best on your journey.

Josh, Nancy, and Brandon
